

Write a letter to a relative over 50 years old who lives in another town. If you haven't seen him/her for a long time, be sure to do some "fair sharing" about your own self. Tell a little about what goes on in school or after school. Then pick two or three questions from the following list, or ask something else you've wondered.

- What do you remember about the Vietnam War? What went on in your life while it was going on?
- What do you remember about the Gulf War?
- Who are the earliest relatives you remember, and where did they come from? What did they do? Did they speak English as their first language?
- Are there some interesting stories or memories about those people?
- What was your favorite treat to buy from a store? What did it cost?
- What was the most challenging weather you remember?
- Is there anything we buy in stores today that you remember making for yourself?
- What did kids do on Friday after school when you were my age?
- Do you remember doing something really fun that people don't know how to do anymore?
